Parking Permit in London

When moving in London, ensuring that your removal van has a designated space to park is crucial. Many areas in London have strict parking restrictions, meaning you may need a parking suspension to temporarily reserve a spot.

What is a Parking Suspension?

A parking suspension is a temporary restriction that prevents other vehicles from parking in a specific location for a set period. This ensures that a parking space is available for essential use - such as moving house.

Parking suspensions are commonly applied to:

Controlled Parking Zones (CPZ)

Pay & Display Bays

Resident Permit Bays

Yellow Line Loading Areas (subject to approval)

Once approved, the local council will put up official “Parking Suspended” signs in the designated area before your moving day.

Why Do You Need a Parking Suspension for Moving?

A parking suspension is essential for securing a safe, legal, and convenient space for your moving van. Without one, you may face:

- Limited Parking Availability - Other vehicles might occupy the space near your property.
- Fines & Penalties - Parking in restricted areas without a permit can result in heavy fines.
- Delays & Extra Costs - Movers may need to park far away, leading to longer loading times.

- Traffic Obstruction - Unloading on a busy street without a designated spot can cause congestion.

A parking suspension is essential for securing a safe, legal, and convenient space for your moving van. Without one, you may face:

How to Arrange a Parking Suspension in London

To arrange a parking suspension, follow these simple steps:

1. Check Your Local Borough's Requirements

Each London borough has its own regulations, fees, and processing times. Find your council's parking department online to check specific requirements.

2. Plan in Advance

Most councils require 5-10 working days' notice, so apply as early as possible to avoid last-minute issues.

3. Gather Required Information

When applying, you will need to provide:

- Your full name and contact details
- Exact location of the suspension (street name & parking bay number)
- Date & duration of the suspension
- Reason for suspension (e.g., moving house)
- Vehicle details (if required by the borough)

What is a parking suspension?

A parking suspension is a temporary restriction that reserves a parking space by preventing other vehicles from parking in that spot. It's typically used for activities like house removals, construction, or filming. Councils enforce the suspension by displaying official "Parking Suspended" signs at the location in advance.

Why do I need a parking suspension for moving?

You need a parking suspension to legally reserve a parking space for your moving van near your property. Without it, you risk fines, delays, and extra labour costs. It ensures the van can park safely and efficiently without blocking traffic or using restricted bays.

How do I arrange a parking suspension in London?

To arrange a parking suspension, contact your local council and submit an application. You'll need to provide location details, dates, and the reason for the suspension. Most councils require at least 5–10 working days' notice, so plan ahead to avoid disruptions.

How do I apply for a parking suspension in London?

You can apply online via your borough council's website. Some councils also accept applications by phone or in person. Required details typically include your contact info, location, dates, purpose (e.g., moving), and possibly vehicle details.

How much does a parking suspension cost in London?

The cost varies by borough but typically ranges from £30 to £100 per day or per bay. Some councils also charge admin or signage fees. Always check your local council's website for the latest pricing and payment methods.

When should I apply for a parking suspension?

You should apply at least 5 to 10 working days in advance. Some boroughs may require more notice, especially in high-demand areas. Applying early guarantees availability and avoids last-minute complications or rejections.

Where can I place a parking suspension for moving?

Parking suspensions can be applied to: Resident bays, Pay & Display bays, Single yellow lines (subject to council approval), and Loading bays. Ensure the location complies with council rules and is as close to your property as possible.

What happens if I don't get a parking suspension?

Without a suspension, your moving van might not find space near your home, causing delays and extra costs. You could also be fined for illegal parking. Worse, the van may block traffic or cause safety issues if forced to park illegally.

Can the moving company arrange the parking permit for me?

Some removal companies in London offer to arrange the permit on your behalf, often for a service fee. However, the responsibility typically falls on the customer. It's always best to confirm with your chosen moving company before booking.

Are parking suspensions different from parking permits?

Yes. A parking permit gives ongoing permission to park in designated areas (e.g., for residents), while a parking suspension temporarily restricts access for specific dates and purposes. For moving house, a suspension is typically what's needed—not a regular permit.
